The back gore and piecing for the front gore are laid on an open width of material, each section being placed over a lengthwise thread. The satin is doubled, of course.

Take the remainder of the goods and fold it in half. Place the front gore directly on the lengthwise fold, as illustrated in the cutting guide and all will be ready for work.

If the skirt is desired shorter than the length provided, cut off the lower edges of gores or turn a hem the desired amount.

The draped sides are trimmed with buttons of self-material, these buttons appearing again on the deep cuffs of the lace sleeves and on the points of the flare collar.

SEEING THE OTHER GIRL HOME

"I cannot tell how the truth may be: I say the tale as 'twas told to me."

Was there ever a lover who did not, at one time or another, face the selfimposed duty of seeing another girl-home who had been calling on his fiancee? This courtesy of itself would not be worthy of comment or attention, but when the same girl falls into the habit of coming three evenings or more a week-expecting her friend's lover to continue escorting her home-the mater calls for serious considera-

The friendship between the two girls may be strong, but there's a limit to chum love. Often wise lovers resort to the time-worn, tried and true remedy of inviting a nice young man friend to call and upon his shoulders is shifted the responsibility of seeing the unwanted girl visitor home. This solution of the difficulty does not last for long. The friendly young man who has "helped out" rarely relishes being called upon a second time to see a young girl in whom he has no interest whatever a long, dreary distance to her home, to oblige a friend.

When a girl friend persists in in truding upon special courting even-ings, it should be intimated to her in as delecate a maner as possible that the girl whom she comes to visit will be at home to her friends only on such and such evenings. If she is left to find her way home alone the way she ame and if sie values the friendship to highly that she must see her friend hree or four times a week, and means well, having no thought of cutting her hum out with her lover by way of his scorting her home so often, she will ay her call in the afternoon.

The flancee who sees her lover con-stantly bringing her friend home may haev no tinge of jealousy n her heart trusting both explicitly, still she secretly resents such a proceeding. If there is ever a break in their romance, o her dismay it is always the other girl he turns to for sympathy. She learns then the value her friend places on her affections when she sees he encouraging her lover, willing to break with her for all time, if need be.

Should she attempt to call on her one-time friend on the evening she was expecting a call from the man she had won from her, she would be reated with scant courtesy or perhaps asked out and out to time her visit to a more convenient evening. Where one girl shows deliberately her object in calling on her friend who has a lover—the desire to be in his company—her friendship, so called, is worth having. Innocent girls who are the victims of such a chum's wiles learn sooner or later to fence with them in love's game.

A true friend will do everything in her power to have her chum's affair run smoothly Under no circumstances would she do so unmaidenly a thing as attempt to undermine her in her did. lover's affections. The choice of girl associates is every whit as important as the choice of desirable young men to whom invitations to call are ex-tended. It is by no means true that "all is fair in love and war." It is never fair dealing for one young women to covet her friend's beau and deliberately make plans to steal him from her, covering her actions with the guise of friendship.
